Usually when people are looking for a job, everyone wants the job that will offer the best and greatest benefits, and that's quite wise! Why don't we use the same criteria when it comes to "gods?" Why don't we expect the same in the spiritual realm? We actually do ourselves a disservice by not using the same principle.

My reason to make this statement is quite simple: If we would use the same principle as when we are choosing a job in the spiritual things, we would not only be way, way better off, but most of us would discover a lovely truth about the God we serve, and that is found in Isaiah 65:24: "Before they call, I will answer. While they're still speaking, I will hear." (GW). "And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." (KJV). It does not matter which translation we use, they all say the same thing and that is that the answers for your prayers will be available before you even start praying! That's how in tune God is with our needs!

If we are feeding on the Word we will know the promises, and the God who promises, and be assured of the fact that no prayers will be unanswered! For a matter of fact, He even says that "while they are speaking, I will listen!" Wow, a wonderful promise!!! I believe that this is one of the greatest promises we could ever have as children of the living God!
